

Taneshia ("T") Canady Barton is a diplomatic disruptor, force multiplier, and storyteller. A transformation and delivery executive obsessed with evolving and aligning organizations for purpose and power, Mrs. Barton has transcended what others have seen as impossible by building high-performing, customer-centric teams focused on reimagining the future, and cultivating the entrepreneurial spirit and innovation culture within corporate environments. Across industries and functions, Taneshia has built a track record for bringing broad corporate visions to life by developing and executing hyperconnected, evidence-based roadmaps to lead organizations through periods of significant change and ambiguity via strategic alignment and disciplined execution.

Over the past 15 years, Taneshia has been honored to serve as an Executive Management Consultant and Chief Strategist focused on developing and executing strategies for game-changing growth events (from post-close M&A activity to starting new business units on foreign soil). She currently serves as a Lead within Google's Cloud Customer Experience organization focused on digital enterprise strategy and innovation, where she wears the hats of Chief Strategist and Chief Transformation Officer for industry leaders undergoing digital transformation. She also continues to dedicate her time as a heralded coach and mentor across Alphabet (Google's parent company) and beyond, as well as a highly-sought speaker at internal and industry events.

Prior to Google, Mrs. Barton established and led the Security & Resiliency Organization's portfolio delivery practice and digital transformation portfolios within Dell Technologies, while successfully envisioning, incubating and scaling several complex, wide-reaching customer engagement initiatives that led to significantly improved customer experience, employee productivity, and product delivery. Throughout her career, she has been honored to help global enterprise clients establish innovation-focused delivery practices, including her tenure as co-founder and CEO of the boutique consultancy and advisory firm, ThinkPower.

She is said to "see the unseen and connect the dots" like no other and to be relentless in her pursuit of excellence. She's a leader that builds leaders, teams, and organizations that consistently improve performance, while impacting lives in such a way that people are better overall as she herself strives to be a benefit to the world. In her own words, "I will make the impossible possible. I want to transform lives and business exponentially (side-by-side) by developing innovative ecosystems that leverage the digital economy and emerging technologies to produce mind-blowing results (products, revenues, innovations)."

T. Canady Barton earned her MBA from Rice University's Jones Graduate School of Business (where she received the Jones Citizenship and M.A. "Mike" Wright awards for leadership, exemplary service, and significant contributions to the school) and a Bachelors of Science in Chemical Engineering from Texas A&M University, where she is honored to be a lifetime member of the Lettermen's Association and a Dwight Look College of Engineering Distinguished Scholar. A lifelong learner, she has also received her executive certification in Strategy and Innovation from MIT, as well as recognition from Harvard Business School for her studies focused on disruptive strategies. As she moves forward in her career and personal life, her focus is on building a legacy that includes opening the door for extraordinary opportunities and creating a path for others.
